Since the Bluebirds have struck a winning gait the chances are largely in favor of Richmond's landing the pennant here, and all Jake has got to do now is to keep the boys in line, and they will mainstain their lead over the other clubs, there can be no doubt. The Richmond team is some distance in the lead of all lase from being hit—Cavanaugh. Double lase from being hit—Cavanaugh. There is really no reason why Rich-There is really no reason why Richmond should give up first place. We have had our slump, and gone down over 100 points in the percentage-list, but, then, we never went below first place, and have started again on the up-grade to prosperity and the pennant. Of course, Wellowan for neither does "Spec." have started again on the up-grade to usual prosperity and the pennant. Of course, McGon for doubting the ability of our Bluebirds to win out in the stretch.

The boys showed the stuff they were made of early in the season, and played National League ball for about two months. Then the slide came, as it will to the best of clubs, and we went down, down to rock-bottom. The slump was probably a good movement, as it has perstaid to increase the interest in the league, and base-ball fever is now at its height all over the State.

When Tannehill jumped after that high bounce many thought he was going right up to the sky-but he didn't. He just came down again, and threw the runner out very easily.

Spec. McGowan caught Cavanaugh at HULL-CLIMBERS WORKING HARD.

The Lynchburg club is playing a close second to us, and are doing great work in the field and at the hat, but they are not one whit better players than those rounding over to where the two men were rounding over to where the two men were second to us, and are doing great work in the field and at the last, but steep against out, clearly but Umpire Enright was out, clearly but the bag, and our "Spec." holding Cav. but the Bag. The other teams in the league-Norfolk, Petersburg, Roanoke, and Portsmouthare rapidly bunching, and while the indications now are that Richmond and Lynchburg will hustle for the pennant, the other clubs will put up a good article of ball, and will be found somewhere near the front at the close of the season. Petersburg will probably forms up abreast of Lynchburg before the middle of August, and it is barely possible that the Farmers will play the cup series with Richmond, though it is more likely that this series will be played between Richmond and Lynchburg. Nerfolk and Portsmouth seem to have no ambition to land the pennant, but either team will be satisfied if it beats the other out. Roanoke has an excellent team, and a most noke has an excellent team, and a most gentlemanly set of players, but ill luck has attended them throughout the season. and though they have played good ball and are doing excelent work they are still at the tall-end, and the indications are that they will remain there.

DOES NOT DESERVE CENSURE. Jake Wells has been severely criticised. He does not deserve any censure, however, for he has labored nobly for Richmond, and many a hart of the labored noble for Richmond. In the selections of some of his players ever, for he has labored nobly for Richmond, and many a hard-fought battle was won alone by his superior general-ship. He is unquestionably the best-posted base-ball min in the State to-day. He knows the players and their records in almost every league in the country, and if it comes down to a question of getting new material, there is no man in the league better qualified to secure them than Jake. He would have hard work just at present to strengthen his team.

Dr. outside of the National League, there are only two leagues in the country that are stronger than this—the Western and Eastern leagues. Neither of these are liable to disband or to sacrifice any of their players, therefore, unless the teams in this league can pick up stray players here and there, as was done in the cases of Kelly and Bradley, there will be no more strengthening. The men who now compose the teams in this league are apt to finish with their respective clubs, and The best club will win, and let us all Richmend can't hit the bail." So often of late have the rooters of this city made use of that expression when discussing the relative merits and demerits of the teams composing the Virginia State League. It is about time they were changing their tune now and admit-ting that the Bluebiris are sluggers. They can hit, and hit well, and they oubtedly demonstrated their ability o do yesterday afternoon, when in one uning they fairly batted Roanoke's litcher (Stahl) out of the box. They batted well all through the game,

They batted well all through the game, making eleven hits, with a total of fourteen bases, but it was in the second inning that they fairly slaughtered Stahl, and six hits, with a total of eight bases, were bunched from his delivery in rapid succession. Everybody was hitting the ball, and the horsehide was kept merrily rolling to and fro over the grass, and the Romoke players were kept chasing after it, while run after run was scored, until the thing grew monotonous, and the crowd fairly heaved a sigh of relief when the site was retired.

While the opposing pitchers in both contests did good work, the work of the men behind differed as much as it is possible for the Coata dering the first three in-Tannebill was in the box for Richmond, and he proved a most intricate puxils for the Goars during the first three innings. In the fourth, lowever, they got on the limit and pounded out three hits, which, with the assistance of errors made by McGowan, Eerte, and K-liy, and a wild throw on the part of Tannebill, noticed them four runs. Fultz lined out a double in the next longer, and Padden, doing Ekewise, softed lim. That ended the run-getting, though there was some little bitting thereafter.

The finishers, especially those in the outed, afforded Tannahili excellent supfeed, afforded fanneam exertest sup-port, and to their errorless work is large-ly due Eleismand's success. Little made a most peculiar hit in the reventh in-ning, which nearly resulted in a home run for him. He caught the ball square-ly on the "trade-mark" and landed it on the top of an of the signs organs! on the "trade-mork" and landed it next man fortunately struck out. Once upon a time there were four brothers, and they made up their minds to go away one by one and seek their fortunes. So the eidest packed up the things he might need and slung them over his shoulder, and took a staff in his hand, and went away. There were two handicaps down for decision—the Brighton Handicap (of the guaranteed value of $1,200) and the Pegasus Handicap, a steeplechase for 4-year-olds and upward. In the former, Lucky Dog (who was favorite at odds of 1 to 2), cut out the pace to the stretch, when Walker apparently made no further effort, and permitted his stable companian, Lovedale, at a longer price, to win by three parts of a length. The favorite finished a length in front of Red Skin.

In the second race for the Pegasus Handicap the Peer was posted the favorite, but St. Anthony, who was second choice in the betting, won, with plenty to spare.

When the going was very fast in this race, Judge Morrow, the Peer, and Dwight fell, and all were more or less injured. Perkins immediately rengented and finished the race, passing under the ed more, and so he drank and drank, till the people and the walls seemed to be swimming round and round. SPOKANE, WASH., July 6.—Captain Paul Webb, whose back was broken while.

By-and-by he comes to the place where the men were sporting themselves in the field hard by; and they called him to come over, but he would not go. Then they all began to jeer and gibe, and say: "Ho, ho! he is afraid to leave the road," "I'm on the right way," said he, "and I shall keep by it." With that he looked at the men through his eye-glass, and lo! he saw that they were not men but geens; and when he took away the glass from his eye they had all yanished; and there. hts eye they had all vanished; and there at the side of the road, he saw the deep rift, and his eldest brother lying at the bottom stark dead, and he went on his way, On and on he went for many days, till him to go up and cat and drink what he liked best, all for nothing. "Nay." said the lad, "I shall not turn out of the right way."

With that he looked at the hous through his ginss, and, lo! he saw that the ment was all ashes and the drink was fire, and that the people's feet tened with iron chains to the tened with fron chails to the floor, so that they could not get away. And when he took away his glass the house and the man and the people were all gone, and there was nothing there but the dead body of his second brother, twisted as if he had died in agony, and his nails dug into the ground. So the lad was glad that he had not turned aside, and he went on his way. And hy-and-hy he

"Ho, ho! he is afraid to leave the road."
"Am IT" said he. And with that he turned off the road to go to them, but he had not gone many steps before he fell into a deep rift and was killed.

Well, a few days after, the second brother, not knowing anything about the first, packed up the things he might need, and took the road as the other one had done. And when he came to the place where the road parted, the velled figure came up to him, and said: "Whither away?"

"I am going to seek my fortune," he said.
"Will you seek it by right or by tower in the wood yonder; that it was full of gold. But the lad said, "Nay! I shall not turn out of the right road."
With that he took his glass and looked, and the tower and the gold vanished, and he saw nothing but the dead body of his third brother, crushed out of all shape, and the bones of other men that had perished there before. So the lad would not so much as rest by the way-side, but held on his way.

By-and-by night came on, and the lad wrapped himself up and lay down by the roadside to sleep. And a long and sound step he had. Well, he awoke in the tower and the gold vanished, and he saw nothing but the dead body of his third brother, crushed out of all shape, and the bones of other men that had perished there before. So the lad would not so much as rest by the way-side, but held on his way.

By-and-by night came to the place where the road as the other one had done. And when he came to the place where the road as the other one had done. And when he came to the place where the road as the other one had done. And when he came to the place where the road as the other one had done. And when he came to the place where the road as the other one had done. And we had the bones of other men that had the bones of other men that had the saw nothing but the dook belt on the saw nothing but the dook by other the said.

will you seek it by right or by wrong?" said the veiled figure.

Well, he thought a bit, and then said he, "I will seek it by right."

So the figure showed him the road, and offered to give him the little eyeglags fer the ring that was on his finger. But he said, "I can see well enough without it."

And, so saying, he addressed himself to that the sun ever shone has tourney. And, so saying, he addressed himself to this journey.

Well, when he came near the place where the men were sporting themselves in the field, they called out for him to come and join them. But he would not go. Then they began to jeer and gibe, and to say, "Ho, ho! he is afraid to leave the road." But he never minded them a bit and went on the special companies the selection of the road, and the road." But he never minded them a bit and went on the special companies to him at the shelding of the road, and the road." But he never minded them a bit and went on the special companies to the special companies to the special companies the special companies to the specia and while he was yet looking at out of the palace and down the golden steps came the veiled figure that had come to him at the shedding of the road, and had said: "Whither away?" And it said to him: "Since you have kept by the way that is tight, and have not been turned morning, which, however, proved to
